

Hi, my name is Adam Kleinschmidt. I grew up in Glenwood, MN. My family has always spent a lot of time in the outdoors which is how I fell in love with the outdoors. Early on in high school I knew I wanted to spend my career working in the great outdoors. I attended the University of Minnesota, Crookston where I double majored and received my bachelor of science degrees in Natural Resource Management and Natural Resource Law Enforcement. I worked seasonally in the natural resource field with different agencies throughout college. I also received my master's degree from North Dakota State University in Natural Resource Management. From there I spent the next couple of years as a farm bill wildlife biologist in Becker County, MN working for the Soil and Water Conservation District there. After that I spent the next 3 years working hands on managing of our public lands. I look forward to serving the Big Stone County residents to help them conserve and protect our natural resources.
